

Bindi

When I came to the San Antonio humane center, I was looking for a new dog for a friend of mine, who was heartbroken over the passing of his 14 year old dog. As I went from kennel to kennel, I passed a small scared and very shy dog who sat in the corner wearily wagging her tail as i stopped to look at her, she was not at all what I was looking for in a dog, I like big adventurous dogs, but she was connecting with me on a level I can not explain. So I asked to take her out to the play area. And at first, she did what any dog would do, she sniffed around for a moment, then looked up at me with her soulful Amber eyes ran over to me and flopped over on her back at my feet, with her tail wagging. Needless to say, from that exact moment in time, I belonged to her. Keeping in mind I already had two dogs, I was worried she may not get along with them, they may overwhelm her, but the second she came home with me, she has fit right in with all of us. It's as if she has been here all her life. We have absolutely fallen in love with her, we're all wrapped around her little paws. Her name is Bindi, we kept the name she had because we figured she had enough change going on, and she seems to like her name, it's unique just like her. The reason I'm writing is to make a point, the small, shy dog was not at all what i was looking for, but she was exactly what i needed. So if you see a dog in a kennel, who is perhaps a bit shy, remember, they may just need a home to be themselves in. Oh and I did manage to find a new rescued pup for my friend, he brings her over every weekend for play time. We go camping, hiking, and to the dog park and she is still learning to listen to commands, but I am being patient with her just like she is patient for me when we hike. Bindi is a bit spoiled but she is such a good dog, her sweet disposition and kind nature are so wonderful, I look forward to every new day with her, she always surprises me with how hard she tries to learn . She is my better half. :) oh and by the way, Bindi is the red head of the bunch in the photos. The other two beautiful pups are skyler and storm.

Best regards,
Sarah
