

Sariya

We adopted a precious little Siamese that my son named Sariya. The name means "God's Princess." My son bought her with money he had saved from doing chores around the house. We had a very special cat that died about a year ago. Her and my son had a very special relationship and I'm glad to say that he has found that again with another kitty. Our son was the only blonde haired, blue-eyed member in our family and now he has another in his Sariya-cat. We have 3 children total, our son is 7 and he has two little sisters, 2 years old and 6 months old. The cat loves all the kids and follows them around from room to room. She even sleeps in bed with the kids and of course, she LOVES to play with them. She is also very patient of the baby, who pulls and tugs on her as she crawls around the house and the cat very tolerantly lays there and lets her before being rescued by an older family member who discovers it. Yes, we found the PERFECT pet for our family at our local Humane Society and we are all very grateful.
