

Milo

I always heard people say that when you adopt an animal, they choose you. I had never experienced that until I adopted my sweet fur baby Milo (a.k.a Shock) in September 2014. At that time I was having a really tough time with my other cat, Theodore. He was acting very aggressive and biting and scratching me all the time. It came to a point where I had to consider that maybe I wasn't the right owner for him. Personally, I couldn't stand the thought of surrendering the little kitty I had owned since he was a baby so I was willing to try anything to improve our relationship.

Thankfully, I visited the Kitty Cottage at the SAHS and there was Milo. He was stretching his paws as far as he could outside of his kennel and I just had to hold him. I really had no intention of adopting another cat, but once I held him he hugged me around the neck and wouldn't let go. That was it, he had me hooked (quite literally). I knew he was going to join the family. In the back of my mind, I hoped that maybe Milo would be able to help Theodore adjust his attitude. Surprisingly, ever since the day I introduced my two kitties they have been best bros. They play, groom each other, watch birds outside the window and cuddle together. Milo didn't need any time to adjust to his new surroundings, it was clear from day 1 that he was right at home. Theodore is now friendly, playful and approachable and Milo is such a happy-go-lucky, silly little guy. Thanks SAHS for bringing my special little buddy into my life! He brings Theodore and I so much happiness.
