

Daphne

Daphne has changed our lives a lot. My pug, Ella, had been hit by a car and died back in February and in May I was finally ready to add another member to my fur family. I had a pug and lab mix, and the pug didn't want to play with the lab and the lab was bored out in the yard by himself and had started jumping the fence and roaming town when we were gone. This had me worried about his safety. So in May, I visited the Humane Society and saw lots of energetic and hyper dogs. I wanted to get an adult dog, as cute as puppies are, because I know they are harder to adopt out. In one of the kennels, I saw this very subdued black and white dog and she really sparked my interest. We took her out to play and he was very playful and loving and I decided she would be the perfect addition to our house.

Bringing her home, she DEFINITELY still has the puppy energy, being less than a year old. She destroyed a few things in the house and she likes to dig in the yard, but finally her and the lab have formed a friendship. My lab hasn't left the yard since I got Daphne. They are the best of friends and love playing together. I can't even get them to play with me because they like playing with each other so much!! My pug doesn't like her too much, they get into it occasionally, but recently they are showing signs of progress too. But my main goal was to give an adult dog a home and find a companion and playmate for my lab and I definitely got that with Daphne.
